About this publication

Nursing entrepreneurship in South Africa has seen the emergence of nurse-led businesses providing services like home healthcare, elderly care, and health consulting. Some nurses have established training centres to enhance nursing skills and contribute to professional development.

The role of nurse practitioners has expanded, allowing them to run independent practices and offer various primary and specialised healthcare services.

This shift aligns with global trends recognising the valuable contributions of advanced practice nurses in addressing healthcare gaps. Partnerships between nurses and other healthcare professionals have also become common, fostering collaborative efforts to improve overall healthcare delivery. These entrepreneurial endeavours contribute not only to the economic empowerment of nurses but also to the diversification and enrichment of healthcare services in South Africa. Despite these positive developments, challenges such as regulatory issues and access to funding, remain. As nursing entrepreneurship continues to evolve, it plays a crucial role in expanding healthcare access and addressing unique health challenges in South Africa. This book, Nurses in business, guides the reader through the steps necessary to become a successful nurse entrepreneur.
